FCIS History

The Florida Council of Independent Schools (FCIS) is a professional education association founded in 1954 by a small group of independent private school leaders. Their purpose was to establish high standards for nonpublic schools.

Today, FCIS evaluates and accredits independent schools throughout Florida. As one of the nation’s largest organizations of independent schools, it represents over 73,000 students in 157 member schools. The Council assures that each school maintains high standards and independence of character without political, financial or bureaucratic pressures.

FCIS accredits coed, day, boarding and single sex schools in grades pre-kindergarten through twelve. All FCIS schools have nondiscriminatory admissions policies.

Traditionally, independent schools establish their own philosophies, standards, and programs, developing their own guidelines for academic achievement, discipline, and, in some cases, religious commitment.

The Council is an association member of the National Association of Independent Schools (NAIS), an affiliate of the Council of American Private Education (CAPE), and a founding member of the Florida Association of Academic Nonpublic Schools (FAANS).
Accreditation and Membership

Membership in the Florida Council of Independent Schools signifies accreditation by the Council. Accreditation is conferred by the FCIS Board of Directors after a school meets a rigorous set of standards.

Schools that apply for FCIS membership are scheduled for review by a visiting committee composed of peer educators. This committee studies the philosophy of the school, academic and ancillary programs, media, instructional resources, the physical plant and equipment, and the qualifications of the administrative staff and faculty. Evaluation reports of this committee are submitted to the FCIS Board of Directors for their review. Schools which successfully meet published FCIS Standards and are deemed to be financially stable and to provide quality education are then granted accredited membership into the Council. Schools that have been in operation for less than three years are eligible for New School Candidate status. With the exception of these New School Candidates, all other members carry the Council’s accreditation.

Schools with pre-kindergarten and kindergarten programs must also be accredited by the Florida Kindergarten Council (FKC). Member schools are required to submit annual reports to the FCIS State Office, and each school is visited at prescribed intervals. Accredited schools retain that status for a five-year period. However, if the ownership of a school, its chief administrative officer, its program or its location is changed, an evaluation committee is sent to that school within a year. If complaints about the operation of a school are received, an interim visit may be required. A school loses its accredited membership if the directors determine that FCIS standards are not being met. The Board of Directors meets four times a year to act on reports of the evaluation committees. The FCIS accreditation process is rigorous and relevant; it ensures that member schools have educationally sound programs and operate in a financially responsible manner.
