The girl in the yellow dress.

Some had only ever stolen one dream.
And some not at all and certainly, you are mentioned.
The dress had been stored in a brilliant blue fabric with a gold-flecked pattern.
It was the only untainted bottle on the shelf, and she thought that meant it wouldn't be missed.
She'd opened it on the top shelf after her parents left home to the grocery store and sat on the counter.
She had to find books downstairs from the shop and fill them on top of a stool before she could reach it.
Hastening, she reached the bottle with her fingertips, brushed it off the shelf, and then caught it before it could shatter on the old stained counter below.
It took precious seconds to unwrap the wrapper out, and she hugged it down without hesitating.
